"He who receives an idea from me receives it without lessening me, as he who lights his candle at mine receives light without darkening me. ..."

- Thomas Jefferson

Candle-powered lanterns have a long and interesting history, especially in the Far East. Once floated for military communication on the battlefield, today they continue to be flown by families and lovers expressing their joy and hopes for the future.

This election year, millions of Americans will be seeking liberty. Some recognize the challenges of our time, but still have questions. Lets show them the light! Ron Paul, THE American hero of our time, is leading this peaceful revolution into the next era. Grassroots! Lets share our enthusiasm in a beautiful and fun fashion. Call your cousins, grab your neighbors, and light the sky with Lights of Liberty!

Ron Paul for President of the United States of America

Mr. Hancock

You are probably examining the contents of this package and not quite sure what to make of it.

So first off, I'm a BIG Ron Paul supporter who, after graduating with a load of debt, moved to China to look for opportunity. I've been living in Xiamen, a city along the Taiwanese Strait, for the past two years...reading RTR.org; DailyPaul; and Liberty Forest constantly (my handle is: WorldonaString). When I'm not doing that, I'm teaching English majors at the university.

Anyway, a few months ago I had a really cool experience with some locals who invited me to the beach to launch wish lanterns. It was a local holiday with a full moon and probably fifty or so people gathered on the beach with everyone in good spirits and among friends. The wishing lanterns themselves were the highlight of the night though. Watching these things floating high and silently out across the sea was something special. Already, I had this vision of seeing these lights flying in the hundreds...but for an occasion that would matter to me: Ron Paul's 2012 campaign for President!

I'm in China until August (my personal hope is to make it to the Iowa Straw Poll and let one fly for Dr. Paul). I'm looking to share this idea with someone Stateside who can catch the vision, get excited, and help spread the message.

I've done a lot of thinking about who I should contact: respected forum members, bloggers, friends etc...But after hearing you speak at the r3VOLution March and then enjoying your program Declare your Independence, I became convinced that you may be the man best positioned to help bring this dream to fruition.

My thoughts are always geared towards how to get Dr. Ron Paul in the White House. I think the idea of "Lights of Liberty" could go viral, providing supporters of the revolution with another creative outlet. From experience, I can tell you the launching of these lanterns is memorable and inspiring. Before letting fly, liberty lovers can enjoy some arts and craft time, decorating and writing their wishes, messages, and favorite revolutionary quotations. There should always be an educational aspect. In addition to boosting supporters' morale, it provides the curious with a great way to join the fun and be introduced to the philosophy of personal liberty! If local tea parties or Ron Paul meetups started incorporating liberty lanterns into their events, I'm sure it would gain positive local coverage on the TV as well.

I am overseas and wishing I could do more to help Dr. Paul's campaign. For most of the year, I am unable to go door to door, sign wave, volunteer at rallies etc...This would be my way to contribute in a meaningful way to the revolution this year.

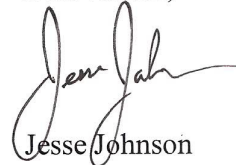

These lanterns are light, affordable, and a lot of fun, bringing strangers together under really positive circumstances. Afterwards, folks will share their photos and videos on facebook, exposing our ideas to even more Americans (and the world!).

Details-wise, I have found a good supplier for the lanterns, making this really easy to do. I'd just drop them in the mail. The prices in the brochure are my best guess. If we streamlined the ordering and warehousing, it's likely we could get those numbers down.

I hope you see the potential for fun and mayhem that I see. If this is something you can get excited about, please contact me and we'll get the wheels turning immediately. I'd love to have these in people's hands for Independence Day, debates, straw polls, etc...

If not, I'd still appreciate any feedback. Please share this idea and enjoy the lanterns I provided. I bet your goats' pasture would be a great launching site! If you decide you need a few more, let me know. ☺

Best wishes,

Jesse Johnson
